I went into this game not expecting much, but what greeted me was a blistering flurry of WTF moments. I'm not sure on the overall message behind the skeleton riding a dolphin to dodge beer bottles and hurl balls of yarn at a twisted female face beyond a possible tie to alcoholism and domestic violence, but it is presented more like some kind of twisted high, liquor fueled fever dream.

Purple Deathmatch does have its faults, the worst being the instructions too late to be useful with enemies or obstacles approaching with little time to react. The lack of an options screen is also annoying, leaving Steam curator The Horror Network who stopped by to comment trying to force it fullscreen (alt+enter worked). I also had to turn the volume down through Streamlabs to get the footage since there's no actual volume option as well.

But, overall, Purple Deathmatch is a screwed up enough ride across a very short amount of time. Hell, I didn't even know I beat the game until someone in my Twitch chat pointed out I had actually finished it. I wasn't a huge fan, but for fifty cents (US currency) it did keep me occupied and, despite giving me a migraine, I don't regret having played it. Given how short it is when you figure things out or know what to do, maybe wait for a sale on this one first, not to mention some Tylenol for the headache some of the effects will surely cause.
